

Failure sucks but it instructs

The JSMC, the Jena Alliance of graduate schools "Life in Focus" and the Max Planck Institute for the Science of Human History cordially invite you to our first online edition of "Failure sucks but it instructs" on the 22nd of January at 19:00. The zoom login details are provided at the bottom of this message.

All too often, academic careers are viewed strictly from a success-based narrative that fails to acknowledge the difficulties we all have to endure in our careers. In order to provide early career scholars with an appreciation of the formative experiences that come from overcoming problems, three senior academics will share their stories and examples in an informal setting.

We are looking forward to seeing you there!
